New DiMavery snares now available

The ultimate eye-catchers from the DiMavery-Stand during this year's music exhibition are now available: the three new DiMavery-Snares SD-400, SD-410 and SD-420.

Countless exhibition visitors have already convinced themselves of the successful symbiosis of visual appearance, sound and price. Each of the three snares is so unique, however, that the choice for any one in particular may prove to be very difficult.

The DiMavery SD-400 with a brass shell measures 35,5 cm in diameter (14") and 16,5 cm in height (6,5"). The brass shell lends the instrument a soft inherent sound, typical for this material. The carefully wrought shell features a brushed surface, upgrading any drum set through its visual appearance. The ten integrated tensioning brackets are equally crafted out of brass.

Identical to the DiMavery SD-400 in size, the DiMavery SD-420, however, features a finely chromed steel shell. The subtly brushed surface is decorated with elaborate engravings, setting the instrument apart from comparable models in this price range.

The SD-420 also features a piccolo variation, the DiMavery SD-410 with a reduced height of 9 cm (3,5"). Here as well, the shell surface is subtly brushed and decorated with elaborate engravings. The main difference to the larger model consists in the rounded lugs, fitting the overall visual appearance.

All three models have the high-quality die-cast hoops, ten stainless steel lugs, and a very attractive price, in comparison.
